Dear Mr. McMurray,

I have been an engineer for 22 years in the automotive industry. I have in excess of fourteen intellectual properties in various fields of electronics which are used in a myriad of automotive technologies today. I understand what it takes to develop and manufacture a product and to bring to market successfully. With the RAC, it is versatile, durable and a cost effective means to secure firearms in many aspects of normal day living.

I am glad to have purchased two RAC's, not just because I like its' technological design but for personal reasons. I have had a Concealed Weapons Permit for several years in numerous states and have not had a secured device that has protected loved ones until I was introduced to the RAC. Recently my truck was broken into with my weapon locked in a secured compartment. Unfortunately, the perpetrators are well aware of most vehicle stowing compartments and ideas. I was personally violated when my vehicle was broken into and my weapon vicariously removed from my possession. I am/was very upset to think that my weapon may be used in other crimes against citizens in my community with a direct fingerprint to myself which all who know me was definitely not the intention.

In the future, my firearms will be secured with the RAC in my vehicle and in my home. With the advent of the RAC, this concept helps me to breathe a little easier and not allow myself to become a repeat violated offender.

I highly endorse the RAC and its National Campaign to "Protect Children for Life".

Sincerely,

Michael J. Lewis
